Dear Leo,

We had been waiting for some weeks for word of your annual pilgrimage when your letter arrived. Since we have come to regard this as our annual sacrifice for charitable purposes, you are welcome. I will invest in our annual bottle of cheap booze for the occasion. We also invite you to use our spare bedroom and spare car.

I'm baffled by your failure to understand the data we sent you. We took special pains to present it in simple, easy to digest form for hematologists. I'll have my children explain it to you when you get here. Your Marshallese victims, incidentally, are a remarkably lean lot of people.

Best regards to you and Lillian.

Sincerely,

William E. Siri
